Preparation for the Adult Years: Helping Families to Transition from School to Adult Life

Educational goals for adolescent learners with autism spectrum disorders need to focus on preparation for adult life. As adolescents age up toward 21, it is an especially important time for parents to collaborate with professionals and share their goals for their child. Vocational skills should include production aspects of jobs as well as skills to address successful integration into the work environment. This free workshop will address how a transition program should help teenagers and adult learners acquire and perform age-appropriate, functional skills in a variety of integrated, natural community environments.
